Financial Services Organizations (FSOs) need data, applications and services of all sorts to fuel a robust financial crime risk management program. For all the business challenges FSOs face, they need to understand the solutions available in the market to solve their unique problems. Unfortunately, it is typically a large undertaking to find, assess, acquire and ultimately integrate the right vendor into existing risk management systems.

Distinguishing your company and solutions can be a challenge

There are plenty of great point solutions that can supplement existing financial crime and compliance programs. As a vendor, how can you get the exposure needed to show the value of your solution and rise above the pack? Even after differentiating yourself from others and getting past the hurdles of selection, how can you quickly show value to cement your relationship with your prospective clients?

Access to Buyers

With so many vendors vying for attention, it can be timely and costly for newer software and services providers to gain access to the right buyers within an FSO.

Establishing Trust

In a highly regulated industry, there are challenges with procurement that limit options for less established vendors. The business and technology teams are often more comfortable working with established organizations.

Accelerating ROI

Showing value quickly is critical to establishing a good customer relationship. Long integration projects with existing systems can be daunting to you and the FSO.
